

My biggest concern is selection of poll workers. These are patronage jobs. On one occasion, I had to help a worker at my AD find my name. She could not read. Her table mate just rolled her eyes and would not assist. She could not find the letter M in her binder. After I located it for her, she could not find my last name, even after I spelled it twice. I had to find the page and point it out to her.

On another occasion, I was standing in the queue waiting to get my ballot, the worker who was clearly under the influence, was instructing the persons in front of me how to vote, i.e., vote down the line Dem (I am a registered Dem, but know that's unethical) I pointed this out to an "official" who went to investigate and thought her actions were NOT inappropriate.

I was disappointed that greater effort was not taken to mail written physical information on a timely basis to voters re RCV. Not everyone has access to Wi-Fi/broadband (BTW high-speed broadband should be free and accessible to all), or if they do, they are not on social media. The elderly (and some not so elderly) do not know how to "Zoom" or "Facebook Live." And, during the time of COVID no one could hold public, in person forums for those without access to digital media or who need more personal interactions
