- State parks and historic sites generate $1.9 billion annually in economic activity.
- For every dollar the state spends on parks, it gets back five dollars.
- Now more than ever, at a time when many families cannot afford to travel for vacations, state parks play an even more vital role in providing recreation and enjoyment of the outdoors.
- These are tough economic times for New York. But the few dollars these cuts will save are dwarfed by the tremendous negative impact they will have on your quality of life.
