

New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault

Testimony of Emily Miles, Executive Director
New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault

Submitted to the New York State Budget Hearing Hearing on Higher Education

February 8, 2024

Founded in 2000, the mission of the New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault is to prevent sexual violence and reduce the harm it causes. Through public education, prevention programming, advocacy for survivors, and the pursuit of legal and policy changes, the Alliance works to disrupt systems and institutions that, unfortunately, can retraumatize survivors when they most need our support.

I would like to thank Chair Krueger, Chair Weinstein, as well as Chairs Stavisky and Fahy and all members of the Senate Finance, Assembly Ways and Means, and Senate and Assembly Higher Education committees for holding today's hearing on Higher Education in the FY25 Executive Budget.

In July 2015, Enough is Enough (EIE) was established to address sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking on college campuses. In addition to much needed advancements in New York State law, the legislation created an EIE funding initiative for rape crisis programs, which now supports 53 organizations across the state to work to prevent sexual violence and provide appropriate interventions when sexual violence does occur.

Though EIE programming has done much to connect survivors of gender-based violence to trauma-informed, community-based services and to promote critical prevention programming, there remain a number of gaps in service delivery and access to students across the state. Over 60 higher education campuses across New York State are not affiliated with an official EIE designated program, this accounts for over 92,000 students lacking access to critical services. At campuses that are being served, current programs report a lack of adequate staffing and program resources to reach the level of depth necessary to meet student needs, especially for high-risk populations. High levels of staff turnover result in a loss of programmatic expertise and campus relationships, making high-level coordination between EIE programs and campus staff nearly impossible. Additionally, complex Title IX and 129-B regulations, and frequent updates to those regulations, require a high level of expertise to navigate, compounding the negative impact of staff turnover.

EIE programs also report a lack of resources to appropriately conduct outreach on campuses to target student populations. With a majority of programmatic funds going to support program staffing, few resources remain to develop and procure culturally and linguistically responsive materials and outreach tools. It is especially difficult to authentically engage diverse, representative student populations without the tools required to develop and maintain quality student volunteer and leadership opportunities. Students are frequently the best and most impactful voices in campus prevention work, yet comprehensive training and support for their work is lacking across the state.

Finally, the high levels of staff turnover in EIE programs necessitate a robust training and technical assistance program to bring new EIE staff up to speed quickly in order to minimize program disruption. EIE training and technical assistance also allows existing programs to grow and strengthen their work, becoming experts in a variety of approved prevention programs that meet a diversity of student needs. Unfortunately, individual EIE programs and the current training and technical assistance providers lack the funding required to invest in these expensive, yet effective, training programs.

Now is the time to invest in Enough is Enough programming to ensure all students across New York State have access to its critical interventions. In order for New York State to maintain its national position as a leader in campus sexual assault prevention, we are recommending that the state:

1. Increase annual funding by $5.1 million for Enough is Enough Programs and TTA, a total of $9.6 million annually.

- New investments will provide all higher education campuses in New York State access to properly resourced EIE programs, as originally intended in 2015.
- Additional funding will allow EIE staff to develop comprehensive and culturally responsive materials which center high-risk students and represent the full diversity of student populations.
- Expanding the capacity of training and technical assistance (TTA) will allow greater support for EIE programs, including access to best practices in gender-based violence prevention and expert guidance in changes to federal and state laws which directly impact student survivors.

2. Designate an additional $1.5 million over the course of three years to fund a statewide Campus Coordinated Response Team (CCRT) demonstration project.

- A CCRT on college campuses is a group of students, professionals, and stakeholders who work together to address and prevent campus sexual violence.

They collaborate to create a comprehensive and coordinated approach, including prevention, response, policy development, training, and support for survivors.

- Recognized as best practice in college campus sexual assault prevention and response, a standardized and robust CCRT approach will allow all campuses to better prevent sexual violence and respond to the needs of student survivors.

3. Conduct a formal 2024-2025 Statewide Review of Enough is Enough Compliance

- The 2017 review conducted by the NYS Office of Campus Safety provided critical information about gaps in campus policies, challenges in training, and advertisement of available EIE resources.
- Current information and data on campus compliance is needed in order to identify where EIE programs should provide more support to campuses.
- A statewide review will provide EIE providers and TTA accurate, up-to-date data about the nature of campus sexual violence prevention and response in New York State, especially following the COVID-19 pandemic.

Over 13% of undergraduate and graduate students experience sexual assault while enrolled in higher education programming. This amounts to nearly 150,000 students in New York State. When you include rates of domestic violence and stalking, those numbers only continue to climb. In the Enough is Enough program, New York State has the tools at its disposal to impact these numbers and bring about the social norms change required to substantively reduce these numbers. We just need the appropriate level of investment to equip our rape crisis programs and campuses to do that work.

On behalf of New York State's 53 EIE providers and the countless survivors they serve every year, I thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today.
