Senate Passes Critical Deficit Reduction Legislation

LIZ KRUEGER February 2, 2009

(Albany) - Working with the Governor and the Assembly, today, the State Senate passed critical deficit reduction legislation taking the necessary first steps toward addressing the fiscal crisis facing New York State. Passage of this legislation demonstrates the Senate's commitment to responsible state budgeting.

Today's action, which will result in closing a budget gap of approximately $1.6 billion for the current fiscal year, will improve the state's bond rating significantly decreasing the costs of funding for public works and other vital projects, as well as demonstrate New York's preparedness to properly manage funds the state will acquire from the federal stimulus package.

"We made a commitment to the people of New York that we would address the budget gap for this fiscal year by adopting a $1.6 billion deficit reduction plan," said Senate Majority Leader Malcolm A. Smith. "By passing this critical legislation New York State has demonstrated fiscal responsibility and economic discipline, better positioning the State's bond rating and opportunity to receive federal stimulus funding."

"The DRP will provide immediate relief to the $1.7 billion deficit in the 08-09 fiscal year and a precedent for future success as we pursue solutions to the budget deficit in fiscal year 09-10 year," said Deputy Majority Leader Jeff Klein (D-Bronx/Westchester). "This package is a huge step toward revitalizing the economy and getting the state back on track. New Yorkers need aggressive action now and, moving forward, we in the New Albany are here to deliver."

"This was not an easy decision to make today, but we have approved a plan that is in the best interest of the state to reduce the 2008-09," said Senator David J. Valesky (D-Oneida), Vice President Pro Tempore of the Senate. "We acted with the governor and our colleagues in the Assembly to reduce our state's budget and put us in a better position to pass a responsible 2009-10 budget in the coming months."

"This meaningful piece of legislation passed by the Senate proves that we are ready to work tirelessly over the course of this legislative session," said Senator Carl Kruger (D-Brooklyn), Chair of the Senate Finance Committee. "Through stern fiscal responsibility we are prepared to advocate for our constituents and deliver real solutions for the people of New York."

"These were not easy cuts, but the longer we waited, the worse they would have been," said Senator Liz Krueger (D-Manhattan), Vice-Chair of the Senate Finance Committee. "The plummeting economy has forced us to rethink government revenue and spending, and the failure to act previously has resulted in the people of this state losing faith in Albany. Part of restoring people's faith in our government is showing them that their tax dollars are being spent wisely."

"In these tough economic times it is important that we remain fiscally responsible, fair, and equitable in how the state's finances are managed," said Senator Martin Malave Dilan (D-Brooklyn). "This process was difficult but partnering with the Governor and Assembly, I am confident that we can get this state back in great fiscal shape and move forward with balancing next year's budget."

"In eliminating the deficit for this fiscal year the legislature took a critical step in expediting the economic recovery of the State of New York," said Senator Ruth Hassell-Thompson (D-Bronx). "The Democratic Conference is standing by New Yorkers through these difficult economic times, and through actions such as we took today, can turn this economy around through proper fiscal management."
