(Albany, NY)-Senator Neil D. Breslin (D- Delmar) is joining the battle against heart disease by reminding New Yorkers that February is American Heart Month, a time dedicated to raising awareness about heart disease and spreading knowledge about prevention in order to save lives.

“Heart diseases, including stroke are the leading cause of death for both men and women in the United States,” said Senator Breslin. “American Heart Month is an essential component in the fight to inform people about the risks of cardiovascular diseases and what they can do in order to live heart-healthy lives.”

Since 1963, American Heart Month has encouraged participation with organizations like The American Heart Association to raise funds for research and education, to better prepare and inform people about the risks of stroke and heart disease that effects over 785,000 Americans each year. People at a higher risk of heart disease include women over 55 and men over 45, as well as anyone with a family history of heart disease.

Once every forty seconds, someone in the United States has a stroke and once a minute, an American dies of a coronary event. Making simple and healthy lifestyle changes can control and prevent a person's risk factors for heart disease.

Senator Breslin stated that "Making changes for yourself and talking to your loved ones about the risk factors for heart disease is a great first step in combating the growing numbers of effected Americans." Senator Breslin added "that participating in local awareness events and donating to worthy causes such as the American Heart Association can help fund research and preventative measures against heart disease."

Heart disease can be prevented. To live a heart healthy life you can:
