Proposal Gives New Tools To Prosecute Wrong-Way Driving, Other Dangerous Actions

State Senator Martin J. Golden (R-C-I, Brooklyn) joined the New York State Senate yesterday in passage of a bill (S.3452) to help make roads safer by strengthening penalties for reckless driving and creating a new crime of aggravated reckless driving. The legislation, sponsored by Senator Charles J. Fuschillo, Jr. (R, Merrick), would prevent car accidents and enhance prosecution of individuals charged with dangerous driving behavior, especially when incidents involve people who are drunk or high and drive on roads in the wrong direction.

Senator Marty Golden stated, “Wrong-way drivers and other reckless drivers repeatedly put lives at risk, and in some cases have caused tragedies. Law enforcement needs stronger tools to prosecute wrong-way and reckless drivers and get them off the roads. I am proud that the Senate has approved this legislation and am hopeful that the Assembly will soon join us in passing it.”

“Every driver has the responsibility to operate a vehicle in a safe and unimpaired manner for their own safety and the safety of others,” Senate Majority Leader Dean Skelos said. “This bill would help make sure law enforcement has the appropriate tools to prosecute and hold drivers accountable for reckless actions when they knowingly jeopardize public safety.”

This proposal creates a new section in the Vehicle and Traffic Law for aggravated reckless driving. A driver engaging in any of the following acts would be guilty of aggravated reckless driving: operating in a manner that creates a grave risk of death; knowingly or through intoxication driving against the flow of traffic; driving 30 or more miles per hour above the posted limit while intoxicated or impaired; driving 30 or more miles per hour above the posted limit while racing another vehicle; or driving 30 or more miles per hour above the posted limit and weaving in and out of traffic. Aggravated reckless driving would be a class E felony.
