

NEW YORK STATE SENATOR

Joseph P. Addabbo Jr.

Addabbo to Hold Evening Office Hours at Ozone Park Library February 2

JOSEPH P. ADDABBO JR January 24, 2012

Kicks Off Celebrations of Community's 130th Birthday; Founded in 1882

Queens, NY, January 24, 2012 – NYS Senator Joseph P. Addabbo, Jr. (D-Queens), announced he will hold evening office hours at libraries around his 15th Senate District throughout the year, as he marks the 130th birthday of his hometown of Ozone Park. This will allow constituents who find it inconvenient to come to his two district offices during the work week to come out to their local library during evening hours to discuss their concerns. The kick-off event will take place at Queens Library at Ozone Park, which also starts the celebrations of the neighborhood's founding in 1882. All are welcome to attend and admission is free:

Thursday, February 2 – Mobile Office Hours at Queens Library at Ozone Park

92-24 Rockaway Boulevard, Ozone Park

5:30 PM - 7 PM

NYS Senator Joe Addabbo (D-Queens) is a lifelong resident of Ozone Park, a community that he represents within his 15th Senate district. Addabbo plans to highlight Ozone Park's 130th anniversary throughout the year as he speaks before various civic groups, visits area schools, libraries, senior centers or attends observances held around the neighborhood. Next week, on Tuesday, January 31, the senator will introduce a Senate Resolution from the chamber floor celebrating the community's 130th birthday. Copies of the document will be distributed to various Ozone Park civic organizations at pizza party celebrations held during the year. A poster contest for school children also is in the planning stages, with a judging panel selected from the area (excluding Addabbo) that will decide the contest winner.

The Addabbos' father, the late Joseph P. Addabbo, who served the area for 26 years in Congress, raised his family there with his wife, Grace, who still lives in Tudor Village within Ozone Park. "Ozone Park is a great community. It consists of hard-working people, small businesses that serve the area and families who truly care about the neighborhood," said the senator. He noted that his father moved five times throughout his life, all within the confines of Ozone Park. Addabbo added, "Ozone Park is a place where my father wanted to raise his family and where I want to raise my family." Addabbo frequently reminisces about fond childhood memories in the community, such as going to the Crossbay Theater to enjoy a movie or eating a hamburger at Wetson's after a school day at Nativity B.V.M.

Ozone Park is an area in the southwest part of Queens, next to the border of Brooklyn. Its early history records that the western part of Long Island was settled around 1660 by Dutch and English settlers due to a land grant by the Dutch West India Company. Settlers established themselves alongside the Rockaway and Jameco Native American tribes who were already in the area. The land around Ozone Park was dotted with farms until 1882, when developers Benjamin Hitchcock and Charles C. Denton converted farmland into tracts of land with homes that were sold to people looking to enjoy the "ozone" or the clean, fresh air of the ocean and bay that washed over the area, namely "Ozone Park". In 1907, developer David Leahy began buying up farms in the area to build small, single-family homes. He envisioned that the idea of refreshing breezes blowing in from the Atlantic Ocean to a park-like community would lure buyers.

A planned expansion of the Long Island Railroad through the community made it accessible to the city. Early residents were the first to experience the thrill of riding the elevated train over the water to spend the day at Rockaway Beach. Hitchcock and Denton expanded the community south, east and north, doubling its size. In 1889, Ozone Park was given its own post office. The year 1896 saw the first library service as the Ozone Park Free Circulating Library, founded by the local Women's Club. On January 1, 1901, the library united with the new Queens Borough Public Library. Its location moved many times, but every location remained close to its present spot on Rockaway Boulevard, near Crossbay Boulevard.

The neighborhood has traditionally been known for its affordable, working- and middle-class housing, popular because of the easy and inexpensive train commute into Manhattan. Through much of the 20th century, it had been known as a tight-knit, Italian-American enclave, but has since become home to immigrants from South America, South Asia and the West Indies, turning it into a multicultural melting pot.

Fun Facts

- Ozone Park is known as the home of Aqueduct Racetrack, which was built as the largest thoroughbred racing track in the country with seat capacity for 80,000. Many famous horses have become champions at Aqueduct, including Man O' War and Seabiscuit, and 1973 Triple Crown winner Secretariat raced there twice. It now shares its vast acreage with the city's newest tourist attraction and first casino, Resorts World New York.
- JFK Airport has a runway where the northern end is reputed to be the ancient burial ground of the Rockaway Tribe and the repository of many of their arrowheads and spearheads.
- Wilbur E. Colyer Square, at Rockaway Blvd., 120th Ave. and 133rd St., is named for a 17-year-old volunteer in World War I. He was killed and posthumously awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for Valor at Verdun, the first and youngest Queens resident so honored.
- Byrne Place, at North Conduit Ave. between 130th Place and 134th Street, was named to honor NYPD Officer Edward R. Byrne, killed on February 26, 1988, while he sat in his patrol car protecting a drug witness.
- Besides Congressman Joseph P. Addabbo, Sr. and Senator Joseph P. Addabbo, Jr., some other notable Ozone Park residents include Beat Generation writer of On the Road, Jack Kerouac; Space Shuttle astronaut Charles Camarda; Broadway star Bernadette Peters; pop star Cyndi Lauper; 1950s Doo Wop group The Capris; The Sopranos actor Ray Abruzzo; Major League Baseball player John Frascatore, pitcher Neal Heaton and NY Mets relief pitcher Pedro Beato; 1960 Olympic figure-skating champion Carol Heiss; middleweight boxer Jimmy Herring; professional wrestler Peter Polaco, better known by his ring name "Justin Credible"; NYC Councilmember from the 32nd Council District and current resident, Eric Ulrich; former NYC Fire Commissioner Thomas Von Essen; former NYC Councilmember Al Stabile; actors Joe Lo Truglio and Hawaii Five-O's Jack Lord, who attended John Adams High School; 1972 Nobel Prize winner in Physiology or Medicine Gerald Edelman.
