

NEW YORK STATE SENATOR

Brad Hoylman-Sigal

Statement By Senator Brad Hoylman, Lead Amicus Appellant, On Yesterday's Court Decision Protecting Rent-Stabilization Rights

BRAD HOYLMAN March 3, 2015

| ISSUE: HOUSING

Hoylman: This ruling will help maintain the integrity of our state's long-standing tenant protection laws by making clear that New Yorkers cannot be forced from their homes as a result of filing for bankruptcy.

NEW YORK – Yesterday, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit ruled that New York tenants who file for bankruptcy will no longer face the threat of losing their rent-stabilization rights. State Senator Brad Hoylman (D-Manhattan) – the lead Senate amicus appellant in a related, recently-decided case by the State Court of Appeals – released the following statement in response:

“Rent-stabilized tenants across New York City can once again breathe a sigh of relief. The decisions by these two courts will help maintain the integrity of our state's long-standing tenant protection laws by making clear that New Yorkers cannot be forced from their homes as a result of filing for bankruptcy. I'm proud that the tenant at the center of this case, my constituent Mary Veronica Santiago-Monteverde, has fought to secure not only her own home, but the homes of any future rent-regulated tenant that must file for bankruptcy. I was honored to take the lead on an amicus brief to support Ms. Santiago-Monteverde and am grateful to Latham & Watkins for their pro bono support of this important case.”
