Felice A. Holder

Born in Danville, Virginia, and the daughter of a preacher, Felice

Holder's life journey has taken her down many paths. Some she recalls with great joy and eagerness. While others, like a dark forest in her soul, only bring a shudder and sometimes a tear.

For Felice Holder life has been anything but a joy ride. Abandonment and abuse haunted her early years. Yet, she has taken every turn with fierce determination and instead of wallowing in her own pain, she used each bump in the road as encouragement to hold up others.

"I grew up knowing the truth but, it's not what I lived. What you were taught was not what was being executed in the way people behaved," Felice said. "After all that I have been through, I wanted to help people realize you don't have to live your life that way. You can do better." And, "better" is what Felice Holder did.

Tired of moving from town to town, Felice began searching for a place to settle down. With a brief stop in Amityville she finally put down roots in Wyandanch. She recollected that after living in so many different places that Wyandanch is the only place that ever felt like "home" to her. Once settled in, she did not waste time before she began extending her hand to help anyone in need. Her list of deeds began in varying sizes and scopes – from providing safe rides to young people, donating food, clothing and furniture to those in need and locating items and services for those that only had to ask. Felice did everything she knew how to do to make a difference in her new hometown - and, like a true philanthropist, her efforts did not stop there.

Professionally, Felice has had a career on Long Island that continued her passion to help others. For seven years she held a position with BOCES working as a Teacher's Assistant for Disabled Children; for over 10 years she worked as an Assistant with the Developmentally Disabled Institute; and, for the last 5 years, she worked through a grant in the Wyandanch Central School District as a Community Relations Specialist, acting as liaison between the School District and the Wyandanch Community and Coordinator of outreach services for students and families needing drug and alcohol prevention support.

During her tenure in the Wyandanch Schools Felice also served at the Vice President of the Wyandanch High School PTO, was Vice President of the Wyandanch Old Timers Day Coordination Committee and a Wyandanch Library volunteer working in the children's literacy program.

To add to this year's honorarium from New York State Senator Phil Boyle, Felice received the Town of Babylon Community Service Award for her exemplary efforts as a community volunteer and advocate for those in need.

“My heart is filled and happy for who I am,” Felice spoke in a whisper. “I am nice and I am proud to say that. And I’m going to share it with other people. After all, that’s the least I can do.”

Continuing her volunteer efforts in the Town she loves, Felice Holder proudly lives in Wyandanch and has 5 children, ages 11 to 35, 4 sons and a daughter.

In late January of this year, Kimberly took another direction and began working for the Town of Babylon Industrial Development Agency (IDA), focused on an integral part of the Town's economic growth and development. The IDA has been working closely with officials, the community and the developer on the Wyandanch Rising Project. Joshua Johnson

Joshua Ryan Johnson was born in Good Samaritan

Hospital in West Islip, New York on March 1, 1996. Joshua began his scholastic career in the Wyandanch Union Free

School District at the LaFrancis Hardiman Elementary

School. He then proceeded to the Martin Luther King

Elementary school and graduated in good standing.

In middle school, Joshua participated in the STEP

(Science Technology Entry Program) at Farmingdale

State University. This program exposes young adults and sparks their interest in science through hands on studies on topics of their choosing.

In the summer of his 8th grade year, Joshua participated in the STEM

(Science Technology Engineering & Mathematics) program. This week-long program gave students the opportunity to experience college and campus life where he had first chance to become an independent.

As a high school freshman, Joshua joined the Wyandanch Memorial High School U.S Army JROTC (Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps). He was guided by his Senior Army instructor on his path to becoming a better citizen. His volunteering work includes Toys for Tots, Veteran Plaza cleanups, tutoring peers, color guards and various other activities. Each of these experiences has given him the leadership he needs to succeed in life. He participated in the Early Scholar Program in his freshman and sophomore year. This program offered college courses to high school students free of charge. He was enrolled in Psychology and an Intro to Photography course.

Joshua also was a captain of his football team his senior year and also participated on the track team for 3 years.

Joshua is highly influenced by his parents; Robert and Teresita Johnson who are wondrous model citizens who guide their son as best as they possibly can. His mother has taught him to always fight for what he wanted and to pursue his dream, while his father has shown him how to be a gentleman and how to conduct himself as a growing young man. He also looks up to his brother and heeds his advice and wisdom. He owes these three people for his current and future accomplishments for their total support and influence.

Paula K. Santorelli

As the daughter of two immigrants from Trinidad, Paula Santorelli's parents' hopes and dreams were to provide her with a quality education that would allow her to have opportunities far beyond their own. As a student at John Dewey High School in Brooklyn, Paula's teachers were supportive and passionate about their subject; her coaches pushed her body and her mind beyond her own expectations, and her classmates were there for her through the laughter and the tears associated with high school experiences.

When she was a sophomore in high school, her brother's life was tragically taken. Paula remembers the love, support, and concern from teachers, coaches, and friends during those dreadful days. Through their kindness and support, she was able to not only get through those very challenging times but to continue to be successful in her academic endeavors and extra-curricular activities. In the summer of 1991, Paula and her friends decided to pack their bags and head off to Syracuse University together.

Paula's love of history was always present, but it was truly solidified at SU. To her, history is the study of everything; there is history in science and there is history in people, places, and even in the post-modern world. This love of history has inspired her love of traveling, reading, and learning. After college she became an ambassador of People-To-People and had an opportunity to travel repeatedly to Europe and Australia learning about the various people and places she read about in history books.

After graduating from SU in May of 1995, Paula immediately began her teaching career at Brentwood High School. BHS has been her home away from home ever since. As a social studies teacher, she has taught a variety of core and elective classes in grades 10-12. She has also advised several clubs (including the Drama Club), taught summer and evening high school and sat on many committees, including the School Improvement Team.

Paula was also a Union Delegate for the BTA for many years. During that time she was also fortunate enough to create and write the course curriculum for the African American Studies class. In 2006, she became a Dean and was primarily responsible for the management of students at Ross High School, along with two other Deans. In 2007, Paula became the Social Studies Department Chair and still holds the position. As a result of the recent changes in education, she has lead various Professional Development and Parental Workshops on the Common Core State Standards. In the summer of 2013, Paula became the Education Chair of the Islip Town Branch of the NAACP.

Brentwood has not only impacted Paula's professional life but her personal life as well. One of the first teachers she met in the district became a very dear friend. She was later introduced to the man who would become her husband in the fall of 2002. Her first born, Andre, was actually born on her birthday in March of 2006. Today, she is the proud mother of 2 boys (Andre and Julian).

Paula hopes to continue to educate, inspire, and protect the interest of each and every student that walks the halls of BHS in the same manner she was looked after by my teachers, coaches, and friends.

He has displayed a deep seated belief in doing what's right and helping those that are in need of any type of assistance.

For the past few years Myles has been an invaluable volunteer to the Youth Enrichment Services (YES) program. He has participated in many different community events, which would not have been as successful without Myles' participation. Myles has taken the skills that he has learned volunteering in

YES programs and has successfully transitioned into a Department of Labor youth counselor position in the YES summer programs. Throughout the summer programs, Myles has worked to mentor the youth in his community as well as engaging with them in a variety of different enrichment activities. This past summer Myles participated in the 1st Annual YES and Senator Boyle's 3 on 3 Basketball Tournament that took place at the Brentwood Recreation Center, where he was one of the winners. Theresa Waldron

Theresa Waldron has dedicated her life to helping the needy in the community. A trait instilled in her from a young age by her Catholic mother who believed in helping people in need and did so at her church in Jamaica, West Indies, and the values that became imbedded in her as she helped at church and in the community. Theresa was involved in various school, extracurricular and church activities such as plays,

dance group, choir and modeling.

Theresa's mission is to help those who have lost sight of their dreams to get back on track and realize that even in difficult times when you don't see how you can possibly reach your goal, there is always a way, you just have to stay focused on your goal and work hard to achieve it. When

Theresa was a Residential Manager at The Body of Christ Youth and Adult Counseling Center, a transitional home in Central Islip, New York, she met women from all walks of life who had lost hope, given up on their dreams because of difficult circumstances and wrong decisions that they made.

She helped them to first forgive themselves and let go of their past, which is what holds most people back, and reclaim their lives, their dreams.

There is nothing more important to Theresa than to continue the mandate from God to feed the hungry, clothe the needy and assist those who need help. She is able to stay true to her values by working with Pronto of Long Island as their Executive Assistant where she assists with the daily operations of feeding, clothing and helping those in need. She also extends her time to help at her church, The River of Life, in Bay Shore, with the feeding, praying and counseling of parents and their children who are in shelters. Theresa assists with the cooking of food for the dinners which the church hosts for them each month and follows up with calls to the parents to see how families are doing.

Theresa will continue her mission of helping those in need for as long as she is able. It gives her great joy, peace and happiness to help make someone's life better, help them realize their goals can be achieved and help them feel at peace.
