

NEW YORK STATE SENATOR

Ted O'Brien

Fighting the heroin epidemic

TED O'BRIEN July 9, 2014

Dear friends,

A few weeks ago, as session came to a close, I voted for historic drug reform legislation that would combat the growing heroin crisis affecting communities throughout New York. This legislation enhances access to addiction treatment facilities, increases penalties for selling opioids that result in death, equips law enforcement with the necessary tools to crack down on drug dealers, provides first responders with treatments that can save the lives of people who overdose, and creates a teen heroin abuse public awareness campaign. These are all important and necessary steps towards healing our communities.

I proudly stood with Governor Cuomo and my colleagues in the legislature as he signed this historic bipartisan package into law at the SUNY Rochester Educational Opportunity Center. The heroin epidemic has taken too many lives, and it is our responsibility as lawmakers to do whatever we can to help stop it. This package helps fulfill that responsibility and sends a message that we will not tolerate those who prey on our communities by distributing this insidious drug.

The passing of Philip Seymour Hoffman, a Fairport native, has brought much-needed local attention to the growing epidemic of heroin use. In Monroe County, admissions to treatment centers for these addictions have grown by 63 percent since 2004 – and by 238 percent among those aged 18 to 24. Young people in our community are overdosing more and more frequently. We must fight this epidemic and prevent these unnecessary casualties, and I believe this new set of laws will help New York State curb this troubling trend.
