Babe Ruth's Grandson Visits Albany

JOHN J. BONACIC March 20, 2015

While he may not have 714 career home runs and have called his shot in the in 1932 World Series at Wrigley Field, it was still a treat to meet Tom Stevens, Babe Ruth's Grandson, in my Albany Office this past week. Tom was in Albany to discuss legislation that would provide for a "right of publicity" for deceased personalities, which would safeguard the significant contributions of deceased individuals like Babe Ruth. Not only did Tom and I discuss the legislation, but as two Yankees fans, we had a great conversation about their chances of winning the pennant this year.
