

NEW YORK STATE SENATOR

Terrence Murphy

Small Biz Regulatory Watch: April 7th, 2015

TERRENCE P. MURPHY April 7, 2015

| COMMITTEE: ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS REVIEW COMMISSION (ARRC)

Last month the Tax Foundation once again ranked New York near the bottom of its State Business Tax Climate Index, at 49th overall. As the Chairman of the State Administrative Rules and Regulations Commission (ARRC), I believe this ranking is due in large part to administrative rules and regulations which are being handed down from the state and federal government.

Earlier today, I launched a small business regulatory watch to make my fellow business owners aware of those rules which could adversely impact small businesses. With more than 140,000 pages of rules and regulations in this state it is no wonder why we continue to export jobs and people. My goal is to improve the communication and transparency of government with my fellow business owners. New York needs to reinvest in Main Street.

Here is what some of our business leaders had to say about today's announcement:

John Ravitz, executive vice president and COO of the Business Council of Westchester, said "Rulemaking is rarely advertised by Albany politicians, mainly because most of the rules are often-times job killers. Having a strong line of communication between a member of the legislature and the business community is crucial. For Senator Murphy to launch this program within his first three months of taking office proves his desire of making economic development a priority here in Westchester."

Jennifer Maher, chairwoman of the Putnam County Chamber of Commerce, said "Departments, divisions, offices, authorities and commissions are constantly making and remaking rules which have a huge impact on businesses, and few business owners realize they have the opportunity to comment on and potentially impact these proposals. Senator Murphy's new publication will help shine light on what up until now has been a largely behind-closed doors process."
