BROOKLYN – Nintendo, The Pokémon Company and Google-spinoff Niantic, Inc. recently released the newest game in the wildly popular Pokémon franchise, Pokémon GO, and this release went straight to smart phones. Users of Android and iOS phones are introduced not to a fantasy world but a GPS map of their surroundings, with certain landmarks, institutions and notable features of locations serving as “pokéstops” for people to pick up items and scour for Pokémon.

However, many if not most major newspapers and periodicals have raised a variety of safety concerns, from users forgetting the real world is around them to vulnerabilities of the game to data theft. Senator Roxanne Persaud (SD-19), in an effort to raise awareness of these issues, sent a letter to the game developer, Niantic, Inc., and asked the company to institute more and smarter warnings.

“I’m excited that people, especially children will get to learn more about the world around them. However, the application needs a warning or a reminder to make sure kids and other users not too distracted to remember the world around them,” said Senator Persaud. “It’s great to see that features of our neighborhoods are interactive parts of the game and give people some insight into their surroundings. But there’s got to be something that helps snap people back to reality from time to time, and hopefully help prevent injuries and accidents.”

Senator Persaud especially urges parents of children to talk to their children who use the application and caution them to:

- Be alert at all times
- Stay aware of your surroundings
- Play in pairs or as a group to ensure safety
- Not to play when those children are engaged in other activities such as driving, riding a bike, or walking fast
- Be respectful of sacred and private property and rules of an establishment

- Remind of the concern of "stranger-danger"

And for all persons, of any age, who use the application, Senator Persaud cautions that users have to be aware that third party applications can retrieve sensitive data from your phone.
