Senator Patrick M. Gallivan (R-C-I, Elma) says the newly adopted state budget includes important financial support for New York's agriculture industry. Once again, the Senate succeeded in restoring nearly $10 million in funding, for a total of $51 million.

"In the 59th Senate District and across the state, agriculture plays a vital role in New York's economy," Gallivan said. "Once again this year, we are investing in our future by promoting the growth and success of our farmers, especially those just starting out. These programs not only support hardworking farm families, they ensure that agriculture will remain New York's leading industry."

The new state budget provides for almost $10 million in restorations and adds to Agriculture programs as follows:

- $1.5 million, for a total of $1.9 million, for the Farm Viability Institute
- $1 million, for a total of $9.3 million, for Agribusiness Child Development
- $1 million, for a total of $5.4 million, for the Cornell Diagnostic Lab
- $544,000, for a total of $750,000, for the Apple Growers Association
- $560,000, for a total of $610,000, for Cornell Rabies

- $10,000 for Chautauqua County Beekeepers Association
- $10,000 for Cornell Sheep Farming

The Senate succeeded in including “Farm-to-Food-Bank” in the final budget after last year's legislation was vetoed. More fresh, New York-grown produce will be available to help feed the hungry by allowing farmers to claim a tax credit for produce and other farm product donations to food banks or other emergency food programs.

The budget also includes $5 million in capital funding for local fairs across New York.
