Natural gas has become a forgotten natural resource within our borders while it's having an enormously positive impact across the nation for consumers and in terms of energy independence, job creation and the revitalization of manufacturing.

Albany, N.Y., May 1—State Senator Tom O'Mara (R,C,I-Big Flats) and a bipartisan group of state legislators joined community, labor and business leaders from throughout New York

State to launch a new coalition called “New Yorkers for Affordable Energy.”

The goal of the new coalition is to support efforts to improve access to cleaner, reliable and affordable sources of energy for the state’s residential and business consumers. New Yorkers for Affordable Energy supports increasing access to natural gas for manufacturing, power production, transportation, and other purposes.

O’Mara, Chairman of the Senate Environmental Conservation Committee, said, “I appreciate and welcome the efforts of New Yorkers for Affordable Energy to highlight the importance of natural gas to the short- and long-term future of conservation, economic development, job creation and energy affordability in New York State. Natural gas has become a forgotten natural resource within our borders while it’s having an enormously positive impact across the nation for consumers and in terms of energy independence, job creation and the revitalization of manufacturing.”
