State Senate Approves Bill to Increase School District Purchasing Limit for Local Produce

SENATOR MICHAEL H. RANZENHOFER May 1, 2017

| ISSUE: AGRICULTURE, REGULATIONS

Albany, NY– State Senator Michael H. Ranzenhofer has announced today that legislation (S4281), raising the monetary limit to $150,000 for school districts to purchase local produce without approval from the State Department of Education, has passed the New York State Senate unanimously.

Under existing law, a waiver from the State Education Department is required for food purchases above $50,000. The bill, sponsored by Senator Ranzenhofer, would amend state procurement laws to conform with Federal rules.

“Requiring a waiver at current levels creates unnecessary, burdensome paperwork for school districts, discouraging the purchase of food products from local farmers,” said Ranzenhofer. “This legislation makes it easier for schools to buy more local produce and support the local agriculture economy, while offering healthier options– more fresh fruits and vegetables– to students.”

The New York Farm Bureau supports the initiative. The bill will be sent to the State Assembly. The legislation is sponsored by Assemblywoman Addie Jenne.

The 2017-18 State Budget raised the threshold from $25,000 to $50,000. In 2016, Senator Ranzenhofer successfully worked to establish an initial threshold at $25,000.
