Under current law, only a village, town or city along the State's coast or designated inland waterway is eligible to apply for funding under the Local Waterfront Revitalization Program. My bill would expand eligibility to allow community boards to apply for funding to support local waterfront revitalization initiatives in our community.

In 2007, former Assemblywoman Joan Millman and I authored a law that allowed New York City's 59 community boards to apply for and receive brownfield opportunity area grants to study areas affected by brownfield pollution. The "Waterfront bill" continues my legislative agenda of expanding resource opportunities for community boards who play an important role in dealing with land use and zoning issues as well as addressing the needs and issues facing our community.

As the State Senator for the 25th District, I represent several neighborhoods with waterfront access such as Red Hook and Sunset Park. I believe strongly that maintaining a working waterfront is essential to the City's economy and have supported the expansion of opportunities at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, Industry City and the Brooklyn Army Terminal to preserve New York City's manufacturing and maritime industries.

I just want to say that I think this is the time for us to consider our state as a whole. It's not north, south, east or west. It is New York State. As one of our former Presidents would say about America. I want to make sure that this body considers the bill that I have introduced which would allow the community boards in the City of New York to be eligible for funding under the same state program.
