“The Preservation League of New York State does outstanding work to help strengthen communities throughout our region and across the state,” said O'Mara. “This forum promises to be interesting and informative, and I hope that homeowners, not-for-profits, business owners, and many others will take advantage of the chance to learn more about the benefits and opportunities of historic preservation.”

“The League is the statewide clearinghouse for the latest information, training, and techniques that illustrate the role preservation plays in making our communities better places to live and work,” said PLNYS President Jay DiLorenzo. “We're pleased to have been invited to Steuben County to discuss programs that can help homeowners provide safer and healthier homes for their families, support nonprofit organizations' efforts to enhance local cultural resources, and help business owners protect their commercial investments for years to come.”
