At a recent visit to the Annie Porter Ainsworth Memorial Library in Sandy Creek, State Senator Patty Ritchie presented the library with the New York State Senate “Empire Award” for its efforts to provide educational resources and programs to the local community.

In addition to carrying the important books people need and want, the Annie Porter Ainsworth Memorial Library also helps people gain the resources and skills they need to succeed in school, learn the latest in technology and find a job.

For the last 30 years, the library has also received support from the “Friends of the Annie Porter Ainsworth Memorial Library”, which has worked with the library to foster important relationships with organizations such as the Sandy Creek Central School District and other local non-profits. Those partnerships have allowed the library to host more than 100 free programs each year.

“Community libraries are critical to a healthy, thriving community. The generosity and support of the library staff, the “Friends of the Annie Porter Ainsworth Memorial Library” and the entire community truly carries on the community-based traditions of the Ainsworth family. The people here also ensure that everyone in Sandy Creek can learn the skills and resources they will need for success throughout the various stages of life,” Senator Ritchie said. This library is exactly what the ‘Empire Award’ is all about. I am honored to present them with this recognition.”

The Annie Porter Ainsworth Memorial Library was built by Danforth Ainsworth 90 years ago, to honor his wife Annie.

The New York State Senate Empire Award recognizes excellence in business. Its recipients demonstrate leadership in their industry, innovation, job creation, economic growth and contributions to its community.
