Senate Republicans Unveil Victims' Justice Agenda

JOHN J. FLANAGAN April 30, 2019

| ISSUE: VICTIMS' JUSTICE AGENDA, CRIMINAL JUSTICE, JUDITH CLARK, LAW ENFORCEMENT

In the wake of so-called “reforms” made unilaterally by Democrats that favor criminals – and Democrats applauding the recent high-profile parole of radical left-wing, domestic terrorist Judith Clark who participated in the Brinks heist that left two police officers and a security guard dead – the New York State Senate Republican Conference today stood up for victims, their families, and every New Yorker impacted by crime with the unveiling of its “Victims’ Justice Agenda.”

The Victims' Justice Agenda, a comprehensive package of Senate Republican sponsored legislation, aims to reform the parole system to keep violent criminals behind bars without parole and ease the parole process for suffering victims, families and the public.

The so-called "reforms" made to the justice system have been panned by law enforcement, prosecutors, and justice experts who were cut out of the decision making process by Democrats, who adopted bail, speedy trial, and discovery reforms without input. Senate Democrats intend to move further and are pushing legislation to grant parole hearings for inmates who have served 15 years once they reach their 55th birthday, regardless of what crime the individual committed.

The sponsor of the bill stated, "There are so many more Judith Clarks out there."

For every Judith Clark and for every criminal, there are far more victims who suffer for years and possibly for a lifetime because of criminal actions. Restoring balance to the justice system means addressing the lingering wounds inflicted on those impacted by serious, violent crime.

"Thanks to Democrats who earlier this year passed a Criminal Bill of Rights, Justice is turning a blind eye to crime victims. It is unconscionable that Democrats celebrate, while district attorneys, law enforcement officers and experts, who were not even consulted, warn of dangers. It is downright despicable to see Democrats cheer about the Parole Board's decisions to free cop-killers and now a radical left-wing terrorist. These heinous crimes are not without victims, and unfortunately those victims will never speak again. But their grieving mothers and fathers, their spouses, their relatives, and all the lives they touched will have to grieve far longer than a murderer's prison sentence – and there is something wrong with that. Senate Republicans will fight to restore justice to the people actually hurt by crime," said Senate Republican Leader John J. Flanagan.

“We hear a lot in Albany about ‘justice,’ but where’s the justice for victims of crime and their families? Senate Democrats’ actions this year have been a slap in the face to law enforcement and those who have already lost their loved ones and childhoods at the hands of criminal offenders. On the heels of a state budget that was basically a criminals’ bill of rights, our voices are more important than ever. We need to make them heard so we can send a loud and clear message to Albany that we stand with law enforcement and victims of crime,” said Senator Pamela Helming.

“I cannot imagine the horror that MaryEllen Monroe, a constituent of mine, confronted when she discovered the lifeless bodies of her daughter, Crystal, and granddaughter, Lilly, on the kitchen floor of their home. Crystal, 33-years-old, and 4-year-old Lilly were intentionally and brutally murdered. There is no second chance for them, but there will be for their killer when he is up for parole. Murder in the first degree does not warrant leniency. It calls for the most severe penalty possible, life without parole. Last year, we passed this legislation in the Senate. I am asking my Democratic colleagues to stand up for victims, for their families, and for justice by helping us pass this legislation again,” said Senator Betty Little.

“We can be compassionate for people who have made mistakes, done their time and are trying to turn their lives around, but first and foremost, we need justice and compassion for crime victims and ensure when it comes to granting parole that their voices are given much greater prominence. So far this year, the legislature has gone over the cliff in tipping the scales of justice toward putting the rights of law-breakers and violent felons above and beyond the rights of honest, hard-working, law-abiding citizens. It’s time we bring balance back and deliver justice for crime victims and their families,” said Senator Jim Tedisco.

“As someone who has spent much of my life in law enforcement, I am very concerned about some of the criminal justice changes advocated by many of my Legislative colleagues. One of the most important responsibilities we have as elected officials is to keep New York residents safe and to ensure our laws hold perpetrators who commit violent crime responsible for their actions and provide justice for crime victims and their families. Any changes to our criminal justice system must be carefully examined and balanced to include tougher penalties for repeat offenders and to protect the rights of crime victims,” said Senator Patrick M. Gallivan.

“Unfortunately, the legislative actions this session have been seriously misguided by enabling violent offenders to be released and by restricting prosecutor’s abilities to keep criminals off our streets. The people we really need to protect are the law-abiding citizens and especially victims and their families. Families of the victims suffer immensely from the crimes alone; it is then greatly compounded when they need to prepare and testify at the Parole Hearing. These families are faced with incredible anguish. My legislation, designated as “Lorraine’s Law” (S4354), would allow a more sensible approach be taken by the Parole Board when scheduling reviews. The legislation should be approved immediately to lessen the unnecessary toll upon the victims’ families. Communities rely on the protection of their children by enforcing state and local laws and regulations regarding homes of registered sex offenders. Currently, offenders are released to temporary shelters or other residences that cannot ensure compliance with applicable laws and regulations. My legislation (S3734) would require the parolees to secure an acceptable permanent residence prior to release, thereby providing an additional measure to support compliance,” said Senator Ken LaValle.

“In the past year alone, the Parole Board voted on two different occasions to release an individual who killed or was directly involved in the killing of four police officers. The release of individuals convicted of serious crimes who showed no regard for the value of human life, demonstrates a blatant disregard for the victims and their families. This is why I support this common sense criminal justice reform package,” said Senator Bob Antonacci.
