

What I am Thankful for

One thing I am very thankful for is my family. In my opinion, my family is very supportive of me and always encourages me when I am feeling down. On top of that, they always see and bring out the best in me even when I think I am unexcitable. Every day of our life, we should recognize our family's hard work distribution that they do for us in order to have a thrilling and memorable childhood followed by an amazing adulthood.

One reason I am thankful for my family is because they are always very supportive of me and always encourage me when I am feeling down. For example, if I have a hard time completing my homework, my family members always support me in any way that they can, and motivate me to do my best. Even if I do not get a high score on my homework, my family will be glad I did my best and say that I will do better next time. My family is never severely frustrated with me and will support me in any situations, difficult or not.

Another reason I am thankful for my family is because they always see and bring out the best in me even when I think I am unexcitable. They would always help me realize and express my full potential, strengths, and positive qualities. For instance, once during a piano playing competition, I came in fifth to last place. However, my parents were not disappointed in me. They would instead motivate me to help me pursue my goal for next time, in this case, to get first place. My family will always find the bright side of a tough situation to lighten things up.

To conclude, this is only a small portion of the things I am thankful for in life. We should all appreciate and be grateful for what we have today since some people are not as fortunate as others. Everyday we should be generous, considerate, and truthful- but most of all appreciative.
