

What am I grateful for?

“What are you grateful for?” is a topic that comes around every year around the time of thanksgiving. I would say I am grateful for many things in my life. I am grateful for the life I get to live in general but I am grateful for the many things I get to experience throughout it. I am grateful for the people I get to interact with, the house I get to live in, the friends I have, the food I get to eat, the clothes I get to wear, the ability to walk, the knowledge I have, the money that God has provided my family with, and the family that I have. I am so grateful that I can talk about the things that I am grateful for. But most of all, I am grateful for my family and God. God gave me the life I am living today and he provides me and my family with everything that we need. My family is also very important to me. They are very loving, caring, supportive, and kind. I love the memories I get to make with them and the time we get to spend together. My family always makes time to hang out with each other and to make sure that everyone is okay. They all work so hard to make sure that me and my cousins and themselves are happy and have everything that we need. I am also so grateful for my friends. My friends always support me in the decisions I make. They are always there for me when I need help or when I am struggling. They are so sweet and kind to me. Whenever my day is going bad, they always seem to know how to cheer me up or make me laugh. So whenever the topic of “what are you grateful for?” comes around, I always seem to think of these things.