People are different and unique in many ways. Everyone has different qualities that make them special. Some qualities are being thankful, kind, smart, athletic, and healthy. There are negative and positive traits that people have and I believe that everyone has both good and bad traits. The qualities I am thankful for is kindness, understanding, and curiosity.

I am thankful to be kind, but I am not sure if it ever did anything to anyone. Regardless I am glad to be kind to people. It is good to help others in need with kindness. Some people go through a lot in life, like bullying. If there is support and kindness, then that can help and change them for the better.

I am understanding. I can easily understand people if something is wrong. I am able to understand people because it is easy for me to understand something wrong. By being understanding, I can help others and know my surroundings, I am thankful.

I am curious, and thankful for that. I will always ask "what is this?" or "how do you do that?" and then I would know what to do after I am told. Knowledge can help you in life because if you were stuck on a question, you would know what to do. It would raise your grades.

In my conclusion... everyone has different qualities from each other. This means everybody is different from their personality to more qualities that whether it is positive or negative qualities makes the world better and special, so this makes anyone to be their self and does not have to change to be normal.
